NATIONAL GALLERY
Gender Equity Action Plan 2021–2026
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF COUNTRY

The National Gallery respectfully acknowledges that we are on the Country of the Ngunnawal and Ngambri people of the Kamberri/Canberra region. We recognise their continuing connections to Country and culture, and we pay our respect to their Elders, leaders and artists, past and present.

We respectfully acknowledge all Traditional Custodians throughout Australia whose art we care for and to whose lands National Gallery exhibitions and staff travel.

The Gallery acknowledges the experiences and expertise of First Nations staff, colleagues and community who have contributed to the development of this Plan.
It is my great pleasure to present the National Gallery’s first Gender Equity Action Plan 2021–2026. Across Australia and the world, arts and cultural institutions are facing the lived realities of exclusions, inequities and histories that have shaped their collections, programs and foundational structures. We are now beginning a process of addressing the significant imbalances that exist.

Our Know My Name initiative launched in 2019, celebrates women artists to increase awareness of their ongoing contributions to Australia’s cultural fabric. Know My Name is a program of exhibitions, commissions, events, learning programs, publications and partnerships. This initiative also heralds our commitment to bringing about long-term structural change and to address historical bias and under-representation of women and gender diverse artists in the national collection. It lays the groundwork for systemic change within the institution.

The Know My Name initiative was steered by a board from July 2019 to January 2021 which included National Gallery Council members Alison Kubler and Sally Smart along with senior management staff. I thank them for their leadership and guidance. We thank Tim Fairfax AC, whose donation enabled the initiative to flourish and acknowledge the foundational work of Betty Churcher AO, the National Gallery’s only woman director, whose leadership in education and programming oversaw an era of creative transformation.

Our commitment to gender equity is core to the new vision of the Gallery to inspire our nation through creativity, inclusivity, engagement and learning. Key principles of the new vision are to advance the representation of women across all collecting areas and programs, and prioritise projects that add new perspectives to art, particularly in relation to First Nations peoples, women and LGBTQI+ people.

The Gender Equity Action Plan (GEAP) is one of several Action Plans including a Reconciliation Action Plan, Disability and Inclusion Action Plan and Sustainability Action Plan that are aligned with the National Gallery’s new vision and Corporate Plan. By affiliating the National Gallery’s GEAP with the United Nations Sustainability Goals, we are joining and supporting global efforts to bring about equity, justice, and sustainability.

The GEAP is a living document that will be updated annually as we respond to the changes and environment in which we work. It provides a framework for us to enact change over the next five years and beyond.

The National Gallery acknowledges the significant work of groups supporting gender equity in the arts. This includes the Australian data and reportage activists the Countess Report, Sheila: A Foundation for women in visual art, and the social media campaign #5womenartists by the National Museum of Women in the Arts in Washington DC.

We hope our journey and this Plan may support you and provide a starting point for how to embed gender equity as a fundamental human right within our organisation and our culture.

WHO WE ARE

Art gives us meaning. It tells the stories of where we have come from and imagines possible futures. Art matters. The National Gallery, Australia’s national visual arts institution is dedicated to collecting, sharing and celebrating art from Australia and the world.

Home to the most valuable collection of art in Australia, the national collection comprises over 155,000 works of art, including the world’s largest collection of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander art. Our significant collection represents the whole of Australian art, modern art worldwide, particularly from Europe and America, and art from across Asia and the Pacific. The collection includes some of the finest examples in Australia of French Impressionism, Dada and Surrealism, the Russian avant-garde, Abstract Expressionism, Pop Art, Minimalism and Conceptual Art.

Our aim is to inspire all Australians. Central to our vision is elevating women artists and First Nations culture. Expansive collection displays are accompanied by a dynamic program of temporary exhibitions, national tours and cultural events that celebrate creative practice and deepen lifelong learning, in person and online.

Based in the nation’s capital, the National Gallery sits on the southern shore of Lake Burley Griffin, on the lands of the Ngunnawal and Ngambri peoples, and within Canberra’s Parliamentary Triangle. Our heritage-listed building, designed by award-winning architect Colin Madigan AO, is a beacon of experimental design and exemplary Brutalist architecture. Art is for all of us. It allows us to see the world in ways that expand our minds, provoke our ideas, ignite our imaginations. At the National Gallery we strive for cultural experiences that surprise, that disrupt convention, that deepen our understanding of the human condition and the world we live in.

Our vision is a nation inspired through creativity, inclusivity, engagement and learning through art and artists. Our mission is to lead a contemporary cultural agenda by championing art and its value in our lives.

The National Gallery has more than 250 employees located in two sites. The diverse workforce includes technical staff involved in caring for, researching and presenting art along with guides, maintenance, security and administrative staff, and management.

THE GLOBAL GOALS

The National Gallery’s Gender Equity Action Plan aligns with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals, also known as the Global Goals. The Global Goals were adopted by the United Nations in 2015 as a universal call to action to end poverty, protect the planet, and improve the lives and prospects of everyone, everywhere. The 17 goals aim to provide a roadmap to address by 2030 the world’s most pressing challenges. Focus areas include health and wellbeing, education, gender equality, sustainable development, employment, and justice.

A UNIVERSAL CALL TO ACTION TO END POVERTY, PROTECT THE PLANET, AND IMPROVE THE LIVES AND PROSPECTS OF EVERYONE, EVERYWHERE.

United Nations Statement of intent.

Ethel Spowers, Balloons, c. 1920, National Gallery of Australia, Kamberra/Canberra, gift of Chris Montgomery 1993
The National Gallery is committed to demonstrating leadership on gender equity. We advocate for change and engage with our staff, community and partners about gender equity issues. We recognise that to effect societal change, we need to ensure our own workplace culture, policy and artistic programs demonstrate gender equity, inclusivity, and respect.

The National Gallery’s first Gender Equity Action Plan (the Plan) was developed over 18 months. An extensive process of consultation and co-design with staff, artists, curators, colleagues and gender equality organisations from across Australia and the world have informed the Plan. Key to this process has been the Gender Equity Working Group’s collaboration with Dr Nina Terrey, Global Partner, Chief for Gender Equality, at ThinkPlace, Global. Terrey facilitated conversations on issues and ideas for gender equity which have shaped the Plan. Our Plan shows our commitment to ensuring the experiences of all women and gender diverse people inform our consultation and decision-making. It is based on the ethical principles of equity, which are the prelude to equality and the precursor of justice.

Gender equity must translate to equity for people of all genders – gender is not binary. We acknowledge that experiences of gender are part of a complexity of factors that inform identity and that impact on individuals’ experiences and access to fair and equitable opportunities. Historically, women are the largest group that has experienced the greatest gender inequities. This is where actions are required to positively address imbalance. Elements of the Plan therefore focus on women, an approach that aligns with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals and is reflected in gender equality strategies and action plans both nationally and internationally.

The National Gallery’s Gender Equity Action Plan is a commitment and a beginning for the National Gallery, our first steps to ensuring the art we collect, and display, represents the rich and diverse composition of our country.

\(^1\) The Australia Council’s 2020 report Towards Equity: A research overview of diversity in Australia’s arts and culture sector notes, ‘There is still no accurate data on the number of Australians who identify as non-binary or gender diverse, and limited data for the arts and cultural sector.’ The report states that 19% of the population identify as LGBTQI+. This data is drawn from ABS Australian Census of Population and Housing (2016). Most equity reports acknowledge data collection and reporting on gender identity is relatively new and not yet fully explored. An action arising in the National Gallery’s Gender Equity Action Plan at Impact area 5.1 is to review and update collection management systems and procedures to expand identity factors in relationship to artists.

Objective
Commit to an inclusive leadership culture where diversity is embraced in decision-making

- Inclusive leaders are collaborative, participatory, courageous, culturally intelligent, and aware of their own biases and preferences, actively seeking out and considering diverse views and perspectives to inform better decision-making

Indicators of Success
- Improvement in gender composition of governing bodies at the National Gallery
- Staff recognition of leaders for creating an inclusive workplace of active listeners, team players with diverse perspectives in their decision-making
- Evidence that staff are involved and valued in strategic decision-making (e.g., town halls, brainstorming and creative sessions)
- Evidence that Council and staff are involved in inclusive leadership training and education

Target
- Women holding 50% of positions across governing bodies at the National Gallery, which is in alignment with Australian Government board commitments
- Most staff describing the National Gallery as an inclusive and positive place to work
- Increased uptake in inclusive leadership training and education across the Gallery
- Application for funding submitted to the Women's Leadership and Development Program

Actions
- Continue to implement the Australian Government's commitment to a gender diversity target of women holding 50% of Government board positions across governing bodies of the National Gallery, including: Council, Council Committees
- Implement gender equity principles across all other committees and boards of the National Gallery, including the National Gallery of Australia Foundation
- Scope a mentoring program
- Provide professional development programs in inclusive leadership
- Apply to the Women's Leadership and Development Program (WLDP) to fund professional development opportunities for women leaders and to promote training in 'non-traditional' roles

Timeframe
- Ongoing
- Year 3
- Year 1 and ongoing

Responsibility
- Director (Head of Governance and Strategic Planning)
- Director (Executive Director, Foundation)
- Chief Finance Officer (Head of Human Resources)
- Chair, Gender Equity Working Group
- Head of Development (Development Manager)
INCLUSIVE LEADERS ARE COLLABORATIVE, PARTICIPATORY, COURAGEOUS, CULTURALLY INTELLIGENT, AND AWARE OF THEIR OWN BIASES AND PREFERENCES...

CASE STUDY 1:
Partnering with Wikimedia Australia

The National Gallery’s partnership with Wikimedia Australia aims to increase representation of Australian women artists on the world’s most popular research tool. Wikimedia is a global movement whose mission is to bring free educational content to the world. To date, the partnership has included two Know My Name Wikipedia edit-a-thons, volunteer training workshops, the establishment of the National Gallery Volunteer Wiki Club, and staff information and training sessions.

Held across the weekend of International Women’s Day 2020, the first national edit-a-thon was delivered in association with the global Art + Feminism Wikipedia initiative and in partnership with Araluen Art Centre, Lawrence Wilson Gallery, Museum and Art Gallery of the Northern Territory, National Gallery of Victoria, State Library of New South Wales and Queensland Art Gallery & Gallery of Modern Art.

CASE STUDY 2:
Know My Name Virtual Conference
10–13 November 2020

Over four afternoons and two evenings from 10 to 13 November 2020, the Know My Name Virtual Conference brought together leading and emerging Australian and international voices and thinkers from arts and academia. There were keynote speeches, panel discussions, and newly commissioned art that considered historical and contemporary experiences of gender in the arts.

Keynote speakers included Worimi curator and educator Genevieve Grieves, American artist Nan Goldin, UK-based writer and broadcaster Jennifer Higgie, UK-based art historian Professor Griselda Pollock, Yamatji academic Dr Crystal McKinnon, and artist Sally Smart.

Through a purpose-built platform developed by Evise, delegates had the opportunity to choose from Auslan interpretation plus captions, audio description or regular feed, with a shared discussion and questions interface.

The conference was developed in collaboration with partners, the Australia Council for the Arts, Australian National University School of Art & Design, University of Melbourne and UNSW Art & Design.

The Conference was chaired by National Gallery staff including Adriane Boag, Program Producer; Natasha Bullock, Assistant Director, Artistic Programs; Kelli Cole, Curator, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Art; Jessi England, John T Reid Outreach Program Convenor.
CASE STUDY 3: Know My Name – The Book

The Know My Name book celebrates art by women from across Australia and features 150 artists with texts written by 115 women writers. The book recognises the impact and legacies of Australian and First Nations women artists. At 458 pages, it is the first publication for the National Gallery to acknowledge Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander nation and placenames.

Australian women authors, including artists, curators, authors, poets, researchers, journalists and academics were invited to contribute newly commissioned texts.

These texts focused on a work by a nominated artist. The selected artworks included works from the National Gallery of Australia’s collection and from state, regional, and private collections around Australia.

The book was shortlisted for the 2020 MAPDA (Museums Australia Publishing Design Awards).
In the arts and culture sector, and in the visual arts specifically, the manifestations of gender inequity and gender bias play out in complex ways. These are specific to the field yet are informed by the same biases and historical and social prejudices that have shaped gender inequality in society.

Women are well represented in positions of administration and cultural management. Consecutive reports by artist activist collective, the Countess Report, have found that over 70% of Australian art school graduates are women. Yet, women and gender diverse people continue to be significantly underrepresented in positions of leadership in the cultural sector as well as in the collections and exhibitions of major visual arts institutions.

These trends are mirrored internationally as identified in the Culture Action Europe report Gender inequalities in the cultural sector and the UNESCO large-scale study Gender equality: heritage and creativity. As well as articulating why gender equity matters in the cultural sector, these sources found that the barriers for women in the creative sectors reflect those found in other sectors. Some of these barriers include unconscious bias and historical norms and stereotypes which contribute to a lack of representation.

The need for collecting institutions, including our own, to take a more proactive role in redressing the legacy of historical bias has been increasingly obvious in recent years. In early 2019, the National Gallery in collaboration with the Countess Report researched our collection data. We found that only 25% of our Australian art collection and only 33% of our Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander art collection is work by women artists. This imbalance is also reflected in our recent acquisition data: of all works acquired by the National Gallery between 2014 and 2018, only 27% of works were by women artists.

The lack of equitable representation in the National Gallery’s collection is one indicator of how the National Gallery has unconsciously upheld exclusionary systems and structures. This has made it difficult for the cultural contributions of women and gender diverse artists to be reflected in national narratives. That such unequal representation has persisted is a source of frustration to waves of women and gender diverse artists, curators, academics and arts administrators. For First Nations women, women of colour, and women with disability, exclusion from the spheres of cultural production and consumption are felt even more severely.

It is critical to understand the historic and contemporary contexts that have shaped and continue to influence where we are now. To bring about change, we also need directed and ongoing measures. In her essay ‘Know My Name (and hers and hers too),’ Julie Ewington reflected on Virginia Woolf’s 1928 feminist manifesto A room of one’s own. ‘[Woolf’s] argument was that women had talent, drive and ambition in abundance, but were thwarted by the lack of opportunity… [by] the way women’s lives and work were traditionally arranged and, too often, constrained. The causal effects of historical inequity, though complex, can be traced.

5 This underscores the need for an intersectional approach to be taken when addressing gender inequality at the National Gallery of Australia. The term intersectionality was coined in 1989 by American Law Professor Kimberlé Crenshaw to describe how race, gender, and other individual characteristics intersect with one another and overlap.

When, in the Renaissance, the figure of the individual artist began to emerge, women were not generally granted access to the academies. This prevented them from formally training as artists. They were also barred from studying nude models. Artistic knowledge tended to flow patrilineally which put women and girls at a further disadvantage.

By the late nineteenth century, women came to dominate art schools and academies, but as Joanna Mendelssohn writes, ‘the men who ran the art schools, who gave the opportunities, who ran the exhibiting galleries and wrote the exhibition reviews did not see the many women art students as future artists.’ Nonetheless, the labours of women – domestic, reproductive, and creative – were the bedrock of key artistic developments through European modernity.

The year 2021 marked fifty years since Linda Nochlin’s influential feminist art history essay ‘Why have there been no great women artists?’ was first published. Nochlin upended art historical assumptions, interrogating the social, educational and institutional obstacles that have impeded the recognition and representation of women artists. She questioned the very foundations of the Western art history narrative and its underlying ideas of ‘genius’ and ‘greatness’. Many women artists throughout history succeeded despite institutional exclusion and social inequities, as Nochlin asserted. Yet the subsequent erasure of women’s work from histories of art through the twentieth century is a subject that art historian Professor Griselda Pollock continues to return to. Pollock worked alongside international academics, writers, curators and knowledge holders who began, with increasing urgency, to examine art institutional structures, critique art historical narratives and use revisionist strategies to reconsider and challenge the canon.
Gender inequity in our Australian context cannot be adequately traced without looking at the relationship between settler–colonialism and gender oppression. The introduction of Western frames of knowledge to Australia brought disruption to the place of ‘women’s power, women’s law, women’s culture and art,’7 as Worimi educator, curator, oral historian, researcher and artist Genevieve Grieves remarked. The complex interplay of race and gender has been explored by Goenpul scholar Aileen Moreton-Robinson. For her, mainstream Australian feminism has prioritised the experiences and demands of white women at the expense of Indigenous women, leading to further subordination.8

The Australian feminist art historian Joan Kerr (1938–2004) advocated for rethinking the very structural foundations of the Australian artworld, illustrating the point metaphorically: ‘we have to paint a new canvas and carve a new frame to fit [it].’9 For Kerr, ‘you could not “add in” women's arts to the history of Australian art without broadening the very conception of art upon which the national canon rests.’10 Decolonial feminist perspectives like Grieves’s emphasise that, more fundamentally, the notion of Western art is a ‘limiting framework’ in and of itself.

Despite these challenges, all-women exhibitions have been organised and championed for decades, often by tenacious individuals impatient for large institutions to change.11 The first International Women’s Year in 1975 was marked by the Ewing and George Paton touring exhibition Australian Women Artists, One Hundred Years: 1840–1940. Organised by Kiffy Rubbo and Meredith Rogers and curated by Janine Burke, the exhibition sought ‘to reassess and re-establish the position of women in the history of Australian art’. This was also the year of influential American feminist art historian Lucy Lippard’s famed visit to Australia where she delivered the Power Lecture at Sydney University.

In 1991, Arrernte/Kalkadoon curator, Hetti Perkins, curated the landmark Aboriginal Women’s Exhibition at the Art Gallery of NSW. The exhibition was part of Dissonance, a feminist art program of over 70 projects that took place in universities, museums, commercial galleries and artist-run initiatives throughout Sydney. Four years later, and to mark the 20th anniversary of International Women’s Year, Joan Kerr succeeded in having her ambitious National Women’s Art Exhibition vision realised. This was a series of 150 independent exhibitions of women’s art mounted across the country. It included the Australian War Memorial’s first ever exhibition of work by women, Through Women’s Eyes: Australian Women Artists 1914–1994.

The world’s first international study An empirical analysis of price differences for male and female artists in the global art market by researchers from Monash University, Maastricht University (The Netherlands) and Artnet Worldwide, published in early 2021, revealed how disparity continues to play out in the secondary art market.
THERE IS A WIDELY HELD BELIEF THAT CREATIVE SECTORS AND THE ARTS ARE PLACES WHERE EQUALITY, FREEDOM AND PROGRESSIVE THINKING ARE FUNDAMENTAL.

‘Equity in the arts and culture context’ in the National Gallery Gender Equity Action Plan, 2022

Justene Williams, Victory over the sun, 2016, National Gallery of Australia, Kamberri/Canberra, purchased 2021 © the artist
Of the 2,572,346 artworks sold at auctions worldwide between 2000 and 2017, 96.1% are attributed to male artists. In the 2021 report The art market, produced by Art Basel and UBS, arts economist Dr Clare McAndrew finds the representation of women artists by commercial dealers across all sectors of the global art market was stable at 37%.\(^{12}\) Pollock correlates the art auction landscape directly with decisions made by museums and galleries. ‘There is an intimate relation between financial and symbolic value. If the work of women is not valued by scholars and curators’ art historically, the market reflects that low estimation.’\(^{13}\)

There is a widely held belief that creative sectors and the arts are places where equality, freedom and progressive thinking are fundamental. Yet this does not translate to the realities of how women and gender-diverse people are represented, and how their work is presented, collected, and valued. Heeding Kerr’s and others’ calls, we need to not just add marginalised voices to the existing canon, but to think carefully about the ways in which creative labour, practice and outputs are valued economically, socially, and culturally. We need to recognise overlooked artistic practices and customs, and oftentimes redefine what constitutes fine arts practice, knowledge and expertise.

Contemporary feminist, queer, and decolonial projects continue to remind us that, as the National Gallery, we have a responsibility to question and address ingrained biases in the stories we tell. We must question methods of truth telling and continually interrogate the social, cultural, and political ideas upon which our systems and structures were formed.

HOW WE MONITOR AND REPORT OUR PROGRESS

The Gender Equity Working Group (Working Group) will champion the Plan. Led by the Chair, the Working Group will meet at least four times per year to monitor and review the Plan’s implementation, with regular and reported updates along with an annual detailed progress report to Senior Management, the Governance Committee and Council.

The report will be made publicly available on our website. We will continue to consult and engage with experts, partners and stakeholders across the visual arts sector and beyond to improve the Plan.

The Chair and Working Group will report on aspects of The Global Goals via the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals Partnership Platform. The online platform is a global registry of voluntary commitments, facilitating global engagement of all stakeholders in support of the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals.

MEASURING PROGRESS
The National Gallery will use a range of measurement tools to track progress against targets. Some of the data for the measures will be present in existing organisational data or in data produced through the actions outlined in the Plan. Other data will be collected through audience and staff surveys.
CREATING EQUALITY MEANS EACH INDIVIDUAL OR GROUP OF PEOPLE IS GIVEN THE SAME RESOURCES OR OPPORTUNITIES AS EVERYONE ELSE.

PUTTING THE PLAN IN THE LEGISLATIVE AND SOCIAL POLICY CONTEXT

AUSTRALIAN LEGISLATION
Commonwealth Acts provide the general legal framework to support diversity in the workplace:
- Age Discrimination Act 2004
- Disability Discrimination Act 1992
- Racial Discrimination Act 1975
- Sex Discrimination Act 1984
- Work Health & Safety Act 2011
- Workplace Relations Act 1996
- Workplace Gender Equality Act 2012

18 Equity versus equality

19 GENDER

20 Gender is how a person identifies as well as being a social and cultural construct. The word gender is often inaccurately used interchangeably with ‘sex’ or the two terms are coalesced. There are however significant differences. Unlike physical sex, gender is a broad spectrum and a person may identify at any point within this spectrum or outside of it entirely. People may identify with a gender that is the same or different from the gender expected of their assigned sex or with no gender at all. These identities may include transgender, non-binary, or gender neutral. There are many other ways in which a person may define their own gender. Gender also exists as social constructs—as gender ‘roles’ or ‘norms.’ These are defined as the socially constructed roles, behaviours, and characteristics that a society considers appropriate for women, men, girls and boys.19 As a social construct, gender varies from society to society and changes over time.20

21 Gender diverse

22 ‘Gender diverse’ people it includes but is not limited to those who identify as non-binary and trans.

23 Intersectionality

24 Intersectionality refers to the complex, cumulative ways in which different aspects of a person’s identity such as gender, sex, race, cultural identity, ability, age, religion and class, rather than being isolated and distinct, can contribute to overlapping and intersecting forms of discrimination and marginalisation.23 The term was first coined by Professor Kimberlé Crenshaw in 1989 when she published her theory of intersectionality.24

25 EQUITY

29 EQUITY VERSUS EQUALITY

31 Clear expectations: guidelines for institutions, galleries and curators working with trans, non-binary and gender diverse artists in Australia, 2019, p.3

32 Equal expectations: guidelines for institutions, galleries and curators working with trans, non-binary and gender diverse artists in Australia. 2019, p.4

35 Caucasian, East Asian, Middle Eastern, and South Asian. These identities may include transgender, non-binary, or gender neutral. There are many other ways in which a person may define their own gender. Gender also exists as social constructs—as gender ‘roles’ or ‘norms.’ These are defined as the socially constructed roles, behaviours, and characteristics that a society considers appropriate for women, men, girls and boys. As a social construct, gender varies from society to society and changes over time.

36 EQUITY OR CIS

37 The ‘cis’ in cisgender comes from a Latin word meaning ‘on this side of’ and is a term used for a person whose physical sex and gender identity align. For example, someone who has been assigned as female from birth, goes by the pronouns ‘she’ and ‘her’ and feels comfortable and aligned with that identity.18

TERMS

MEN
When this Gender Equity Action Plan refers to men, we refer to all men including cis and trans men.

NON-BINARY
An umbrella term for people whose gender identity exists between or beyond the feminine/masculine gender binary. A non-binary person may identify as both or neither male and female, or sometimes one or the other. Some non-binary people identify as trans, others do not. There are several other terms used to describe gender identities outside of the male and female binary such as genderqueer, gender nonconforming, agender, and bigender. Although these terms have slightly different meanings; they refer to an experience of gender outside of the binary.

SEX
Sex refers to the physical differences between people who are male, female, or intersex.

A person typically has their sex assigned at birth based on a medical assessment of the physiological characteristics of their body, including their genitalia and chromosome composition. This assigned sex is called a person’s physical sex and is a social, legal, and medical designation.

TRANSGENDER OR TRANS
A term covering a range of self-defined identities that transgress socially defined and expected gender norms, based on perceived sex at birth. It may mean someone who mentally and emotionally identifies as a different gender to the one they were assigned by society, often living their lives as that gender, and who may choose to undergo gender affirming care. Alternatively, it could be a person who transcends the binary gender system altogether, so that they identify as neither ‘male’ nor ‘female’, ‘man’ nor ‘woman’. The ‘trans’ in transgender comes from a Latin word meaning ‘on the other side of’.

WOMEN
When this Gender Equity Action Plan refers to women, we refer to all women including cis and trans women.
